One of the biggest physical changes that occurs within The Metamorphosis, is Gregor's family reaction towards him. The only instance we see how Gregor's family treats him in his human life, is during the first first scenes of the short story, where there are still yet to be aware of the circumstances. In the scene, we see a seemingly 'normal' family dynamic, in which all are worried of Gregor's well-being when he does not go into work that day. Many scholars argue that Gregor's life is better as a human, because when he turns into an insect, his family treats him with disgust. However, I believe that the way his family treats him is very much the same.... Cathy Song is 1 of those poetasters that- in her soulknows she's not good. Do I know this with metaphysical certitude? No. But the fact that she's not 1 of these annoying PC Elitists that ceaselessly preach says to me that she was probably a stereotypical MFAer who- because of her sex & race- was urged by some well-meaning professorial dope to 'tell her tale' for the benefit of recording her 'struggles. After all, her bio details this struggle so vividly: Cathy Song (b. 1955) was born in Honolulu, of Chinese and Korean descent. Song left Hawaii to pursue her education, receiving a B.A. from Wellesley College and an M.F.A. from Boston University. After graduating in 1981 she returned to Honolulu and in 1983 published her first collection of poetry, Picture Bride, winner of the Yale Younger Poets Award. She has published two other volumes of poetry, Frameless Windows, Squares of Light (1988) and School Figures (1994). She currently teaches at the University of Hawaii at Manoa. There's a lot of struggle in there somewhere- just gotta be, after all- this is America, & she's a non-white male. Well, maybe there's some struggle in this praise of her book of poems called The Land Of Bliss: Cathy Song's fourth collection of poetry unveils glimpses of the elusive but ever-present power of wisdom and compassion. Recognizing that we have the ability to create our own misery as well as our own bliss, she finds the unexpected in broken lives, despair, and even seemingly joyous occasions. Song's poems are often, like a handful of water, "cold and impossibly/clear, unlike anything/you've ever held before." Cathy Song is the author of Picture Bride, nominated for a National Book Critics Circle Award; Frameless Windows, Squares of Light; and School Figures. Her work has been widely anthologized in such publications as Boomer Girls: Poems by Women from the Baby Boom Generation, The Morrow Anthology of Younger American Poetry. Her poems have also appeared on the buses of Atlanta, the subway cars of New York, the Poetry Daily website, and, most recently, in The Best American Poetry 2000. The recipient of numerous awards, including the Frederick Bock Prize from Poetry, the Shelly Memorial Award from the Poetry Society of America, the Hawaii Award from the Poetry Society of Award from the Poetry Society of Award from the Poetry Society of Award from the Poetry some of this 'water': Handful Like scooping water by the handful out of a lake, you write a poem, contain it, gaze into the small cup of your hand. While you admire what feels cold and impossibly clear, unlike anything you've ever held before, you still did not get it. Into the momentary displacement left by the dipping of your hand flows more. Is this a terrible poem? No. But it's not good. It's a 1-note metaphor with an utterly predictable resolution. But it could be better. That's why it's the titular poem. But before fixin' iy up let's look at some snips of more typical CS logorrhea. This from Magic Island: Voices are lost in waves of wind that catches a kite and keeps it there in the air above the trees. If the day has one color, it is this: the blue immersion of horizons, the sea taking the sky like a swimmer. The picnickers have come to rest their bicycles in the sprawling shade. Under each tree, a stillness of small pleasures: a boy, half in sunlight, naps with his dog; a woman of forty squints up from her book to bite into an apple.... I lost count of the clichés. Guess how it ends?: Suspicious of so much sunshine, they keep expecting rain. This is bad teenage writing. In fact, it's worse than that- it's something even pre-teens would cringe over. Here's more dreck- this from Heaven (aren't you just imagining all the clichés that could drip from her mind?): He thinks when we die we'll go to China. Think of it--a Chinese heaven where, except for his blond hair, the part that belongs to his father, everyone will look like him. China, that blue flower on the map, bluer than the sea his hand must span like a bridge to reach it. An octave away. That's the opening stanza. See what I mean about her not being a hardcore PC Elitist? It is utterly amazing that this stuff is praised. OK, don't say something 'negative' if that's what you fear. But, my oh my, why praise this stuff? It is so banal & generic that I'm at a loss-yes, she mentions China, but that place name is easily morphed to any other ethnic group. This sort of 'I am this' poem is a virtual template. Let's check out the ending: It must be in the blood, this notion of returning. It skipped two generations, lay fallow, the garden an unmarked grave. On a spring sweater day it's as if we remember him. I call to the children. We can see the mountains shimmering blue above the air. If you look really hard says my son the dreamer, leaning out from the laundry's rigging, the work shirts fluttering like sails, you can see all the way to heaven. Did I really need to underline the clichés? Apparently since morons foist this kind of crap upon us: "In Cathy Song's poetry I keep recognizing my own various approaches to and avoidances of the writing job: the just claims which keep me from it, my need to hide my meaning at the same time as i reveal it, the need to go, 'deeper into the darkest room,' trying to the core of something permanent,' and what always accompanies that need'distraction itself.... obstacles to keep her from entering the last room,' wanting permanent,' and what always accompanies that need'distraction itself.... obstacles to keep her from entering the last room,' wanting permanent,' and what always accompanies that need'distraction itself.... obstacles to keep her from entering the last room,' wanting permanent,' and what always accompanies that need'distraction itself..... obstacles to keep her from entering the last room,' wanting permanent,' and what always accompanies that need'distraction itself........ outcome of a female take on experience, though maybe it's only my own desire for security and shelter." -Phylis Lodge "To read poems as true on the tongue and the eye as these use a deep, transcendent sweetness. I feel transported, restored to gravity-ground, melodious mind." -Naomi Shihab Nye "To follow Cathy Song's collection of poems over the years is to reach, in this season, 'The Expense of Mildew'; from daughter, to wife and mother, to the daughter of aging parents, Song has arrived full spiral. This is bliss." -Kimiko Hahn Ugh. The rewrite: Handful Out of a lake, you contain a poem, in your hand. What feels unlike anything in the momentary displacement left by the dipping of your hand flows audience was left puzzled rather than uneasy, the island unfamiliar and threatening, so Adrian's comment that the island is "uninhabitable, and almost inaccessible", certainly fitted with the Arctic setting.
